Students at the Crossroads: Understanding & Addressing Homelessness Among Students

While homelessness is not actually experienced in school, it certainly impacts the facilitation of education. How educators perceive homelessness can create positive connections or lead to harmful misconceptions. At all costs, we want to avoid punishing homeless students for factors beyond their control. The goals of this workshop are to provide an overview on homelessness, its causes, consequences, and the rights of students; to expand our understanding of students experiencing homelessness; and to cultivate and enrich community collaborations focused on assessing and addressing the needs of homeless families.

TEACHER EVALUATION AND PROFESSIONAL LEARNING

As New Jersey moves to a more defined set of expectations for evaluation of teaching and learning, it is imperative that educators have an understanding of the standards-based models of evaluation that are being promoted by the state. This learning experience will focus on developing an understanding of the changing face of evaluation and the alignment with professional learning.
